The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph in Belgium, under date of Wednesday, says:

"The Germans to-day succeeded in forcing the passage the River Scheldt at a point between Schoonaerde and Eigenem. They did this under cover of an early morning fog.

"During the last few days the Germans have brought up large reinforcements. They are no longer depending on the Landsturm and the reserve troops, but are bringing up troops of the first line. At least one armsy corps is concentrated at Assche, from which place they advanced through Alost toward the Scheldt.

"The previous attacks of the Germans on the river were all made under cover of violent artillery assaults, which repeatedly proved futile. the German guns already have done much damage in the city. ### WAR SUMMARY

German heavy artillery is pounding Antwerp, the last remaining stronghold of the Belgian army, while German armies to the west continue the thus far indecisive struggle with the French and British allies.

The situation at Antwerp is in doubt. The censorship which masked the fighting there until the Belgian Government was compelled to withdraw to Ostend, is now veiling the attack on the city proper. Reports coming through London refer only to events of yesterday morning or earlier.

King Albert is reported as leading a part of the Belgian army out of the city with the intention probably of effecting a juncture with the British and French, and as having arrived at Selesaete, a village on the Dutch frontier. Refugees from Antwerp continue to pour into Holland. They report that

The bombardment of Antwerp's inner forts is said to have begun at 12.30 o'clock Thursday morning. Two of these forts are reported to have been silenced and fire is said to have started in four parts of the city.

He also had $700 in cash. The prisoner was remanded for one week. the State Banking Department on Aug. 8, marched to the Criminal Courts building to-day and tried to storm the District-Attorney's office, demanding the return of their money and the indictment of the Jarmulowskys for various and sundry crimes. Fully 200 of the angry crowd managed to push past the policeman in the downstairs corridors and swarmed up the stairs to the top floor, where Assistant District-Attorney Groehl has his office.

Grochl, who has the matter of the Jarmulowsky failure in hand, was busy interviewing witnesses in his office when the vanguard of the crowd rushed the corridor outside. One of the bank's paying tellers, who had just been released from Groehl's office, was unfortunate enough to appear outside just as the crowd charged down. Somebody picked up quart bottle of ink and threw it at the terrified teller. Detective George Trojan, who was on duty at Groehl's office, caught the bottle while it was in the air, but the cork flew out and both Trojan and the teller were drenched with ink.

Then Groehl came out and told the crowd that he had chosen six depositors whom he would take immediately before the Grand Jury. These six harangued the depositors and assured them that a conviction would surely be found against the bankers for accepting deposits after they knew the bank was unsound The depositors were then appeared and they left the building.

A demonstration of angry depositors of the Mandel bank, which also was closed early in August, occurred earlier in the day in front of the building at No. 41 Park Row, wherein Mandel's lawyers have their offices. The police stopped the trouble

LONDON, Oct. 9 (Associated Press).

—In the War Bureau's report to-day the following anecdote which is current at the front, although its absolute truth is not vouched for, is related. "On a re-cent occasion a British cavalry subaltern, who was cut from his men, hid himself in the edge of a wood by a road. It was not long before he saw an unsuspecting armed German soldier patrolling the road. He could have shot the man without warning, but he felt that it would be akin to murder to kill him in cold blood.
